• The coronavirus small business stimulus money is actually going to big corporations that don't need it. Large companies like Ruth's Chris Steak House, a luxury Texas hotel chain, Wall Street hedge funds, and the Los Angeles Lakers basketball team have received millions of dollars through the loan program. While big corporations that don't need the money are getting these small business loans, mom-and-pop shops and local restaurants have been unable to get the funds needed to avoid going out of business.	53%	20	8	19	73%

The Trump administration is using the coronavirus pandemic as an excuse to hand out money to rich CEOs and corporate executives. Republicans used the coronavirus relief bill to give millionaires a $90 billion tax cut and they included a $500 billion slush fund intended to bail out large corporations. Meanwhile, 30 million Americans have lost their jobs due to the coronavirus pandemic while the richest 1% of the population have added more than $308 billion to their wealth.	48%	16	5	31	64%

The Trump administration has used the coronavirus relief bill to hand out special perks to Trump campaign donors, who spent millions of dollars lobbying the Trump administration on the bill. So, it's no surprise that the small business stimulus program is handing out hundreds of millions of dollars to Trump's friends. To make matters worse, the administration isn't keeping track of companies who receive taxpayer dollars.	48%	14	6	31	62%

The Trump administration's rollout of the small business stimulus program has been incompetent and mismanaged. Thousands of small businesses have been unable to get access to emergency financial support because the Trump administration's loan website doesn't work, despite them having weeks to fix it. And if that isn't bad enough, the website allowed a massive data breach that exposed the personal information of thousands of loan applicants, including Social Security numbers. After all of that, Trump claims his administration has done a "spectacular" job.	46%	20	10	24	66%
